IN looking round about the town,
Observes a stranger guest,
There's many things he sees that gives
To Maysville life a zest.
He points us to the Market House
The ash-piles we are makin',
The show by hogs that calls to mind
The famous Roger Bacon.

It is now thought harvest will begin about the 26th inst.

Good fish may now be had in this market at 6 and 8 cents a pound.

A LARGE raft of pine lumber arrived Saturday afternoon for W. B. Mathews & Co.

THERE are indications that the working-men, particularly the poorer-paid class, are growing tired of the iron strike.

DR. ANDERSON will be absent from the city, on a professional trip to Sardinia. He will return on Saturday the 17th. j12 2t

THE East Maysville Band left for Cincinnati Sunday morning by the steamer Thompson, to attend the musical tournament at that place.

THE Sodality B. V. M. will give an ice cream supper at Neptune Hall next Wednesday evening, which everybody is invited to attend. It is expected to be a very pleasant affair.

ON Friday, at Ripley, Nelson Brown, colored, jumped into the river from the steamer Bonanza while she laying at the wharf, and was drowned. He is believed to have been insane.

MRS. JENNIE DACRES has secured the rooms in the Christian Church, and will open a select school there the first week in September. She will be assisted by her daughter, Miss Mande Dacres.

LAST week Myall & Riley, agents in this city for the celebrated Huston buggies, sold fifteen of those vehicles ranging from $65 to $175. They are made at Columbus, O., and are warranted to be of very superior workmanship.

J. W. SPARKS & BRO. announce elsewhere an important reduction in prices that will, no doubt, largely increase the trade of that popular house for the next few days. They are offering a very attractive stock at prices that will be a surprise to many. See the advertisements in another column.

THE open air concerts by Haucke's band, so heartily enjoyed and appreciated by the public last summer are to be resumed. The opening concert of the season will be given this evening at the Court House yard, the following being the programme:

PART I.
March: Othello.....	Boyer.

Sewerage and disease.

With the introduction of water works the attention of our citizens has naturally been directed to the question of sewerage, though unfortunately without reference to the vitally important question of sanitation, and since the problem of sewerage and sanitation must be solved together, and are taking all the resources of modern medicine and mechanics, it is well that our citizens should hasten slowly even in the apparently unimportant matter of constructing a drain.

Dr. Frank Hamilton, of New York, diverting to the well-known fact that the so-called "zymotic," diseases are nourished and multiplied by warmth and filth, has recently confirmed by some quotations Dr. Carpenter of London, an opinion from previously expressed by himself, that scarlet fever, diphtheria and other diseases of this class might be derived from cesspools, and conveyed through sewers. Dr. Carpenter's paper appears in the Sanitary Record for March 1882, and is entitled "Some of the Conditions Which Modify or Increase the Infective Character of Scarlatina." The subjoined extracts will repay perusal; and their importance will be appreciated by every intelligent citizen.

Dr. Carpenter says, "I have for a long time past had my own opinions as to the causation of scarlatina, and of the conditions which modify or increase its infectious character. These opinions have been based upon an experience which has not been narrow, or restricted to a practice among one class of persons or to one district." He then proceeds to give a resume of personal investigation and study of four severe outbreaks of scarlatina; all of which, in spite of the most energetic sanitary measures, continued to recur at longer or shorter intervals, until the connection with the sewers, or with sewage sinks was severed; and the epidemics disappeared altogether.

All of these outbreaks occurred in private or public school houses. In the first example the school house was connected with an abandoned cesspool, on severing which connection the disease promptly and permanently disappeared; and Dr. Carpenter remarks: "It must be evident that the cesspools in the school yard was intimately associated with the reappearance of scarlatina; that it contained some material which continued the vitality of the disease germs."

The second example was in the case of a private school. Three successive outbreaks of scarlatina occurred, until, the "water-closet was taken away altogether." Since which time it has not reappeared, now a period of nearly eight years.

"The third set of cases" appeared in an elementary school. After a fruitless attempt to expel it, "I came to the conclusion," says Dr. Carpenter, "that the fault in the construction of the sewer system, which I am about to detail to you, was the foundation of this epidemic."

The fourth set of cases was in a school connected with a large pauper establishment. "We know," says Dr. Carpenter, "how scarlatina gained admission to the infirmary. The washings and excreta of the patients naturally found admission to the sewer, and I proved that that there was a current up the sewer sometimes."

Finally Dr. Carpenter remarks "what inference do I draw from these cases." It is that the causation of scarlatina may as often arise from sewage emanations, and sewage contaminated with the scarlatina germs as from personal contact."

HON. GARRETT S. WALL, of Mason, for a number of years judge of the county court, is spoken of as a probable candidate for congress in that district. He is an excellent gentleman, very clear-headed, and sound as grape-shot on all political issues. He would serve the state very creditably in congress.—Frankfort Yeoman.

A Mother's Terrible Deed.

CHICAGO, June 10.—Mary Syeboldt, aged thirty-five years, wife of Casper Syeboldt, a baker, murdered her four children this morning and then committed suicide. The story of the crime is one of the most remarkable in the police annals of Chicago, and ranks with any of the Borgia sensations. At five o'clock this morning Casper Syeboldt a rived home, after working all night at J. B. Campbell's bakery, and was met at the door by his wife. She was dressed in a new chemise, trimmed with lace and blue ribbon, purchased especially for the awful occasion. She acted strangely and could scarcely stand.

"Come in, Casper, come in," she said, waving her hand, "and see our little children. They are all dead—all our four little children are dead—gone to heaven, Casper. See how pretty they are! Every one got nice flowers for the angels!"

For a moment the husband was stunned, and thought his wife crazy. He hurried to the bedroom, and there a strange sight met his horrified eyes. Laid out as for burial were the four children—Matilda, aged twelve; Anton, aged seven; Annie, aged two years and six months, and the baby, aged less than four months. They were dressed in white, trimmed with blue ribbons, hair nicely smoothed and tied with blue ribbons, and in their hands bouquets of fresh flowers. All were stone dead except Matilda, and she was just breathing.

Mrs. Syeboldt followed her husband into the room so full of death, and said: "Yes, I sent them all to heaven because God wanted them."

Casper Syeboldt was stupefied. His lips moved, but no sound came. He at last recovered sufficiently to realize the awful deed, and then hastened across the street and summoned Mr. Martin, a grocer. That gentleman hastily procured the services of Dr. Moore, but he could do nothing for the dying Matilda.

Attention was then turned to Mrs. Syeboldt, who was in convulsions. She managed to tell the physician that she gave the poison to her children first, laid them out, and then prepared herself for death, taking the remnant of a large dose of strychnine. She died in great agony shortly after seven o'clock and was laid out beside her children.

It is difficult to find a motive for a crime so unnatural and terrible, but it is presumed that domestic troubles caused the woman to lose her mind. The husband is in such a terrible state that he can not answer questions intelligently. Mrs. Syeboldt procured the poison at Werkmeister's drug-store, Archer avenue, yesterday afternoon, and as soon as her husband left for his work last night she coolly began preparations for the murder, dressing herself and the children as described.

The home of the Syeboldts is in the second story of a poor little frame house, and bears the impress of poverty. Among the neighbors the Syeboldt family bears a good reputation, and its members have been considered honest, hard-working, respectable people. If the wife and husband had trouble sufficiently serious to cause insanity, the people in the neighborhood have no knowledge of it. Mr. Syeboldt's friends were summoned and took him in charge. Matilda, the fourth and oldest of the murdered children, died at ten o'clock, completing the list of mother and four children dead within a few hours, and in the same room.

The place of the murder was thronged this morning with curious and sympathizing friends. The room occupied by the distracted husband, Casper Syeboldt, and where his dead wife and children are lying, composed part of the second story of a cheap, plain, two-story tenement. The rooms are furnished only with the furniture and utensils barely necessary for housekeeping.

The motive of the woman in this silent, bloodless destruction of her children and self may be gleaned from the following notes and bits of writing found among the effects of the family this morning. They are by the oldest child, a daughter of twelve. The resignation shown by the writer is remarkable. That domestic unhappiness was no minor cause for the deed of the mother will be inferred from the following, as it can be from the few data supplied by the husband:

"I wish to all my playmates a better and happier time than I had. So good-by to you all, for you all are welcome to the place where I have gone. Remember me."

Among the papers was one containing two verses of the hymn beginning: "There is a happy land," &c. Another note is addressed to a playmate:

"MARY MURPHY: Please tell Lizzie Martin [probably the daughter of the landlord of the house No. 51 Finnel], Minnie Otten and Lizzie Raymond that I have forgotten their dispute and forgiven them. I guess they will feel sorry for it. May they think of me as their friend."

TILLIE SYEBOLDT.

Other notes read as follows:
DEAR PAPA: Forgive me. We have to leave you. Mamma thought it was the best we could do. I am now in the better land, where we all can live in freedom. Your daughter,
MATILDA.

"DEAR PAPA: Please bury us decent, at Wudder's cemetery, that we may all be buried together. That's all I request from you. My knife and money is for your present, and is in the collar box. Buy for Anton, Annie and self flowers from the money which I have saved. It is mine. The knife is yours."

"FOR MAY MURPHY: I will tell you the story of our trouble. My mother was always sick, you know, and thought often of dying, and thought how if she was dead how we would be treated, and so thought best for all of us to die at once, and bought something to kill us. The baby first, Annie second, Tony third, and I after, and then my mother. We did not suffer much and we are all out of trouble."

"ROSE MORRIS: Take the book that I've brought home from school. It is not mine. It is the history of the United States. Take it to room 5, to Geo. Capronice. It is on the lower shelf of the closet."

"This is for Mary and Nell Murphy, my dear playmates: I wish you a happier and better time than I had. Good bye. You are all welcome."

Two or three of the slips containing portions of the above were written in German characters; the remainder in English.
